ELECTION RESULTS 2006

A total of 204 ballot propositions went before the voters in 37 states on November 7, up from 162 propositions in November 2004. Voters approved 137 measures and rejected 67 measures. The approval rate of 67% is identical to the 67% approval rate in November 2004.

Of the measures, 76 were initiatives (new laws qualified by petition), 4 were referendums (proposals to repeal existing laws), one was placed on the ballot by a commission, and the rest were legislative measures. The 79 initiatives for the year (including the three that were voted on in the summer) is the third largest total since the initiative process was first used in 1902, and shows that the initiative wave set off by California's tax-cutting Proposition 13 in 1978 is still swelling. For the year, voters approved 32 of 79 initiatives. The 41% approval rate is equal to the historical average. (For an historical overview of initiative use, see IRI report Initiative Use 1902-2006, at www.iandrinstitute.org.)

TRENDS

Eminent domain measures to prevent governments from seizing property and transferring it to private users were on the ballot in more states than any other issue (11). Nine states approved the measures (Arizona, Florida, Georgia, Michigan, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oregon, and South Carolina). The two that failed (California and Idaho) also included a regulatory takings component that would have required governments to compensate owners when their property values were reduced by land use regulations. A regulatory takings initiative in Washington also failed. The only land use measure with a significant regulatory taking provision to pass was in Arizona.

Another issue that appeared on many ballots across the country was gay marriage. Seven states approved constitutional amendments that restrict marriage to a man and a woman (Colorado, Idaho, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Virginia, and Wisconsin), bringing the total number of states that have approved such an amendment to 23. Arizona became the first state to reject a constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage, in large part because the measure also included a provision that would have prevented the state from giving benefits to same-sex couples. Colorado voters rejected a measure that would have created "domestic partnerships" that gave same-sex couples the same legal rights as married couples.

Another popular issue was the minimum wage. Initiatives to increase the minimum wage and index it to inflation appeared on the ballot in six states (Arizona, Colorado, Montana, Missouri, Nevada, and Ohio) and all were approved. These measures were placed on the ballot as part of a coordinated campaign to increase support for Democratic candidates and possibly influence the balance of power in the U.S. House and Senate, apparently the first national effort of this kind. INTERESTING ISSUES

Abortion. One proposition that received national attention was Referred Law 6 in South Dakota. In an effort to create a test case for the U. S. Supreme Court to reverse Roe v. Wade, the South Dakota legislature passed a law banning abortion in early 2006. Voters rejected Referred Law 6, in effect repealing the law banning abortion. One reason the law was repealed in traditionally pro-life South Dakota was the concern that it was too severe, lacking adequate exceptions for the health of the mother. Abortion rights activists were also able to defeat laws in California and Oregon that would have required notification of parents before a minor received an abortion.

Racial preferences/affirmative action. Michigan voters approved Proposal 2 that prohibits public institutions such as the University of Michigan from giving preferential treatment on the basis of race. This endorsement by voters could give new life to the campaign to ban racial preferences that seemed to have stalled after early successes in California and Washington. The Michigan measure was opposed by political leaders of both parties, including both gubernatorial candidates. The passage of the measures in California, Washington, and now Michigan, in all cases against the recommendations of bipartisan coalitions of political leaders, suggests that political leaders may be out of step with voters on this issue.

Government finances. Voters seemed to be in a fiscally expansive mood. TABOR-style tax and spending limitations were rejected in three states (Maine, Nebraska, and Oregon) and a property tax limit failed in South Dakota. Voters also approved 16 out of 16 statewide bond issues across the states. Leading the way was California, where voters said yes to 5 bond measures authorizing a combined $43 billion of debt for a variety of purposes including roads, schools, water projects, and low income housing. Bond issues were also approved in Arkansas (1), New Mexico (3), Pennsylvania (1), and Rhode Island (6).

Tobacco. Health organizations qualified Initiatives in several states to increase taxes on tobacco products and ban smoking in public places. Tobacco companies dedicated a reported $100 million to fight these measures, and were successful in defeating tobacco tax increases in California and Missouri. Tobacco tax increases in Arizona and South Dakota that were not heavily contested were approved. Smoking bans were approved in all three states where they were on the ballot, Arizona, Nevada, and Ohio. Less restrictive smoking bans placed on the ballot by pro-tobacco groups failed in each of these states.

California's Proposition 87. An initiative to tax oil extraction and use the money for development of renewable fuels failed in California. Spending pro and con on this initiative exceeded $150 million, breaking the previous record for the most money ever spent on a single ballot proposition by more than 50%. The yes-on-87 campaign was largely funded by Hollywood producer Steve Bing, whose $50 million in contributions set a record for an individual in a ballot proposition campaign.

Animal rights activists continued to enjoy success at the ballot box. In Arizona, voters approved an initiative that guaranteed a minimum living space for pregnant pigs and calves. Florida voters approved a similar measure in 2002. In Michigan, voters repealed a law passed by the legislature that would have allowed the hunting of mourning doves.

There were also two measures that concerned the initiative process, and initiative proponents were defeated in both cases. In Florida, voters approved Amendment 3 that requires future constitutional amendments to received 60% approval to pass. Florida becomes the only initiative state with a supermajority requirement (and one of only two states overall with such a requirement). In Colorado, voters rejected Amendment 38 that would have extended initiative rights to various governments throughout the state and make it harder for courts to disqualify initiatives from the ballot.

The most common issues across the states this year were eminent domain and same-sex marriage.
